YOUR CURRENT LIFE MAP

See your life as it is.

This Map represents the reality you described: what matters most in this season, what feels supported and alive, what is taking or giving energy, how connected each area feels to you, and where the parts of your life appear to influence one another.

Size - How important this Orbit is to you at this stage of your life.
Brightness - How supported and fulfilling this Orbit feels in your current life, based on your answers.
Distance from the Sun - How closely this Orbit reflects who you are and what matters to you. Not shown yet: every Orbit sits at the same distance while this measure is being finalised.

REALITY SNAPSHOT

Most energy out: Social World

You identified Social World as taking the most of your time, attention or emotional energy.

Most energy in: Joy

You identified Joy as giving you the most energy or making you feel most alive.

Largest place now: Body, Restoration, Social World

You rated Body, Restoration and Social World as one of your highest priorities, the highest importance you gave any area.

Most supported: Mind, Body, Love, Social World, Joy

Your answers about Mind, Body, Love, Social World and Joy describe the most support across the statements in those areas.

Needs more attention: Restoration

Your answers about Restoration describe the least support right now. This is a place to look, not a verdict.

Most shaped by expectations: Resources

You identified Resources as most influenced by other people's expectations or social standards.

PERSONAL INSIGHTS

A closer look at your reality

Interpretations of the answers you gave, including the places that support you and the patterns that may deserve attention.

INSIGHT 1 OF 5

Your Life in Perspective

A portrait of the life you described, not a verdict about who you are.

The areas carrying the most weight

You placed particular importance on Body, Restoration and Social World. Importance does not mean an area must dominate your time. It tells us what matters to you in this season.

Where the picture is fuller, and where it is thinner

Mind, Body, Love, Social World and Joy are more supported in your responses; Restoration is less supported by comparison. These are starting points for reflection, not fixed labels.

A contrast worth noticing

You place high importance on Restoration, while several answers suggest it feels less supported in daily life. That gap may be worth understanding before deciding what, if anything, to change.

INSIGHT 2 OF 5

What Supports You

Notice what is already working before deciding what needs to change.

Where your answers describe more support

Your answers describe more support in Mind, Body, Love, Social World and Joy than elsewhere in your life right now. What are you already doing there that helps?

What restores your energy

You identified Joy as giving you the most energy or making you feel most alive. Notice what is different about the way you experience it.

The relationship with yourself

At the centre of your Map, you describe knowing what you truly want, even against others' expectations; and being honest with yourself without being cruel to yourself. Strength in one part of your relationship with yourself does not automatically mean strength in all.

INSIGHT 3 OF 5

Patterns Worth Noticing

Some patterns are easier to recognize when different parts of life are viewed together.

Where what matters and how you live may diverge

You identified Growth as something that matters to you but gets less of your time and energy than you would like. The reason matters more than the label.

The cost of competing priorities

You described Restoration as receiving less care because another part of your life demands so much, while Social World takes the most of your time and attention. Is this trade-off intentional and right for this season?

Where others' expectations come in

You identified Resources as most influenced by other people's expectations or social standards. That is useful to notice, not evidence that your choices are wrong.

INSIGHT 4 OF 5

Your Energy Architecture

Energy is not a grade. It is information about what your current life asks of you and gives back.

Energy moving out

You identified Social World as taking the most of your time, attention or emotional energy. What exactly is it asking of you: time, effort, emotion, attention or something else?

Energy coming in

You identified Joy as a source of energy. What about this experience makes you feel more alive, steady or resourced?

A possible exchange

Social World and Joy play different roles in your current energy. Neither is inherently good or bad; look at whether the exchange feels sustainable and chosen.

Across your Orbits

Growth and Joy give you energy. Mind, Restoration and Social World take more than they give. Asked how the areas of your life relate, you answered: "They somewhat compete."

INSIGHT 5 OF 5

What Deserves a Closer Look

Not a to-do list. A few places where a better question may reveal something important.

Where attention could have wider effects

You selected Restoration as the area where improvement could positively affect the rest of your life. What makes you believe that?

A question to take with you

If Restoration improved even a little, what would you notice first in the rest of your life?

These are provisional interpretations based on your self-reported answers. They are invitations to reflect, not diagnoses or psychological assessments.

YOUR ORBITS, ONE BY ONE

Mind

You described Mind as "very important", and said it requires more energy than it gives.

You reported making quiet space to hear your own thoughts and telling inherited beliefs apart from consciously chosen ones, alongside some friction: caring deeply without fear of loss controlling your choices feels less true right now. Both can be true.

You selected Clarity and Rumination to describe it. These states can coexist.

What occupies your mind most often right now, and how much of it feels chosen?

Body

You described Body as "one of my highest priorities", and said it keeps your energy fairly stable.

You reported eating in a way that supports your health and energy and regular movement, alongside some friction: making choices about your body from care rather than punishment or pressure feels less true right now. Both can be true.

You selected Energy and Capability to describe it. These states can coexist.

What does caring for your body look like in an ordinary week, and what gets in the way?

Restoration

You described Restoration as "one of my highest priorities", and said it requires more energy than it gives.

You reported protecting rest when life gets busy, alongside some friction: sleep that leaves you rested and recovering before reaching exhaustion feel less true right now. Both can be true.

You selected Guilt, Exhaustion and Rush to describe it. These states can coexist.

What would recovery look like if you didn't have to earn it first?

Growth

You described Growth as "very important", and said it gives you more energy than it takes.

You reported actively learning things that interest or challenge you; and allowing yourself to change, even letting go of an old identity, alongside some friction: growing into the person you want to become feels less true right now, and you describe knowing what would help you grow but putting it off out of fear or self-doubt. Both can be true.

You selected Inspiration and Momentum to describe it. These states can coexist.

What would need to be true for you to start on what you already know would help you grow?

Love

You described Love as "slightly important", and said it keeps your energy fairly stable.

You reported being your authentic self in romantic relationships; and communicating needs, desires and boundaries in your intimate life, alongside some friction: caring deeply for someone without losing independence, standards or sense of self feels less true right now. Both can be true.

What would feeling more fully yourself in intimacy look like, in whatever form intimacy takes in your life now?

Social World

You described Social World as "one of my highest priorities", and said it requires more energy than it gives.

You reported close people who support who you are and are becoming and people with whom you feel genuinely seen and understood, alongside some friction: contributing to people or communities beyond work feels less true right now. Both can be true.

Community and career read differently in your answers: community looks mixed, career looks more supported.

You selected Drain and Pressure to describe it. These states can coexist.

Where do you feel most like yourself among other people, and where least?

Resources

You described Resources as "moderately important", and said it keeps your energy fairly stable.

You reported clear awareness of your financial reality and a home and surroundings that support your wellbeing, alongside some friction: feeling able to make meaningful decisions about money and living conditions feels less true right now, and you describe staying in familiar financial or living circumstances because change feels uncertain. Both can be true.

You selected Security and Constraint to describe it. These states can coexist.

How much influence do you feel you have over your financial and living conditions?

Joy

You described Joy as "moderately important", and said it gives you more energy than it takes.

You reported regularly doing things simply because you bring joy; and room for creativity, beauty, play or meaningful experiences, alongside some friction: making time for what makes you feel alive feels less true right now. Both can be true.

You selected Aliveness and Delight to describe it. These states can coexist.

What do you enjoy simply for its own sake, and how often does it happen?

YOUR REFLECTIONS

What can you see about your life now that you were not seeing as clearly before this self-interview?

How little room I leave for rest, even though I rate it as one of the most important things.

Where do you feel the strongest gap between knowing what you need and actually living it?

Sleep. I know I need it, and I keep trading it for one more hour of work.

ABOUT THIS REPORT

This Map reflects your own answers at the time you completed the self-interview. It is a reflection to explore, not a diagnosis or an assessment of you as a person.

The scoring method is under review (preview). Brightness uses your answers to each area's statements; distance is not personalised yet.

Questions answered 'Not applicable to my current life' are left out of the calculations.
